Events in the History of the Convent of the Visitation-Tombs of Some Who Are Buried Beneath Its Walls -Visit From and Speech by John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts,

The Convent of the Visitation, in Georgetown, is a well-known landmark to Washingtonians. Some of the most distinguished women of the country have been educated there, living a great part of their early lives within the sombre red brick walls, and it is, perhaps, safe to say that not one of these brilliant queens of society but has retained amid the world's galeties a fond recollection of the days spent with the good sisters and happy schoolmates.

The institution presents the most piquan contrasts imaginable, for here are seen young girls perfecting themselves in accomplishments that will enable them to achieve social triumphs and women who, while devoting themselves to imparting this knowledge, together with that of a higher nature, have renounced forever "the world and all its pomps and vanities."

The attention of the young pupils is attracted, in many ways, to the fleeting nature of this life, and emblems of mortality are abundant within the convent walls. All of the sisters who have died there, together with the founder and one of the gether with the founder and one of the crewing them with this difference, however, there on me the logue of the order, was he young and beautiful daughter of Commodore Jones, who not long ago took the veil. At the close of the cremony I addressed as few words to the young ladies, assuring them that I felt as much honored in distributing the rewards as they had been in receiving them—with this difference, however, there on me the logue of the order, was he young and beautiful daughter of Commodore Jones, who not long ago took the veil. all of the sisters who have died she of the gether with the founder and one of the spiritual directors, are buried either in the large vault beneath the chapel or in the little cemetery in the grounds. Near by is the tomb of Rev. Picot Clorivere. On plain little boards around the sides of the vault are recorded the names of those who lie buried there. There are, however, five exceptions to this, in the graves of Alice Lalor, three mem-hers of the Neale family, and Miss Yturbide, which are marked by plain tombstones. Around the wall are several Scriptural quotations, and an oil painting of a Visitation nun prepared for barial, her habit and veil adorned with white flowers. Through the windows of the pierced in the thick, ivy-covered walls, is seen the garden, and here again are more tombs, plain black crosses, which mark the site of the little cemetery in the

PLEADING CUBA'S CAUSE

Senor Cisneros Asks the President to Withdraw the Troops.

Three Representatives of the Radient Party Visit the White House and War Department-Further Intervention in the Island's Affairs Resented - A Fruitless Journey.

A melanchely party of three onca-famous Cubans reached Warhington yesterday morning. They had come all the way from Havana to demand that the Government at once withdraw every semblance of control over the Cuban people. During the day they saw both the President and the Secretary of War, to whom they made the appeal. Both received them courteously. but declined to give any promises. Today, the delegation, weary and discouraged, will start for home.

The party was headed by the venerable Santa Lucia, who was the first President of the "Cuban Republic" after the rebellion of 1895. With him were General Lacret y Morlot, one of the generals commanding a division of the "Army of Liberation," and Rev. Dr. Louis Musteller, a priest, who has been prominent in the Cuba Libre movement. All three of them represent the extreme radical wing of the revolutionists, who demand that the American troops leave the island at once.

They arrived from Havana on Wednesday and sore met at New York by Rev. Charles Warren Currier, a priest who has been in close sympathy with them. Accompanied by Ray. Mr. Currier, they reached the Capital yesterday morning, and at 11
o' look they called at the White House.
They were with the President shout half They were with the President about half an hour, while Senor Cisneros vehemently urged his case and pleaded with Mr. Mc-Kinley to leave Cuba unhampered in the hands of the Cubans. The President heard the little embassy courteously, and pron-ited to give careful attention to the writte appeal which was presented to him. He advised that the callers see the Secretary of War, who has direct charge of the Cuban Government. Accordingly, the party visited Secretary Root at the War Department. The reception there was a repetition of the one at the White House.

Thus originated the Order of Visitation Nuns in the United States, a religious order which is now represented in nearly every one of our large cities. The order is peculiar in that, though all branches follow York, and will be there about a week be-
